Meeting One

An Introduction to Springfield

Chapter One: Why We Do Community-Engaged Learning?

Topics: How do you define community? What are the mixed emotions that come along with this type of engagement?

Questions to Think About While Reading:

1. I do Community Engaged Learning because:
2. What was your reaction to learning about these issues and statistics?
3. How can you engage in one or all of these issues and statistics?
4. Desire-centered work vs. Damage-centered work? What do these mean to you?
What do you specifically participate in?
5. What else have you learned from this chapter?

Meeting Two

Chapter Two: Benefits

For our second meeting we will have group discussion and activities on our topic: What we Gain from Community-Engaged Learning. To prepare please read Chapter Two and review the discussion questions below. You do not have to view any of the videos in the chapter; we will watch those together as a group. Let Julie know if you have any questions.

Questions to Think About While Reading:

1. What do I get out of serving? What are the benefits of Community Engaged-Learning?
2. What are some of the required and learned skills from engaging in Community Service work?
3. What does it mean to be an agent of change?
4. Why is it important to build relationships when we serve?
5. In the end of the chapter is thought provoking quote from Uruguayan journalist, writer and novelist, Eduardo Galeano that says:

“I don’t believe in charity. I believe in solidarity. Charity is so vertical. It goes from the top to the bottom. Solidarity is horizontal. It respects the other person. I have a lot to learn from other people”

What does this quote mean to you when you first read it and what is the difference he outlines between service that is done in “charity” vs. service that is done in “solidarity”?

I wish I would have known....

Your guide to a successful Civic Engagement Scholarship experience

My service can relate to my major!

If you already know your major, your service can help you get an idea of your future career and it can help you learn outside of the classroom. For example, many psychology majors look at doing their service at Mental Health Services of Clark & Madison Counties to assist with the needs of adults with mental illnesses or with Osterlen Services for Youth to help with therapy groups. Many premed or bio majors look at Springfield Regional Medical Center or The Rocking Horse Center to get a feel for the hospital setting. Many education majors look at the Arks, which are afterschool programs for younger kids in the community or Warder Literacy Center to help increase literacy among people in Clark County. There are tons of opportunities for every major!

My service can build my resume!

Showing your commitment to this program and to helping others will look great on your resume for graduate school or future jobs. Also, the people you meet in the community and make connections with could see your passion and write wonderful recommendation letters for you!

The office is a safe place on campus!

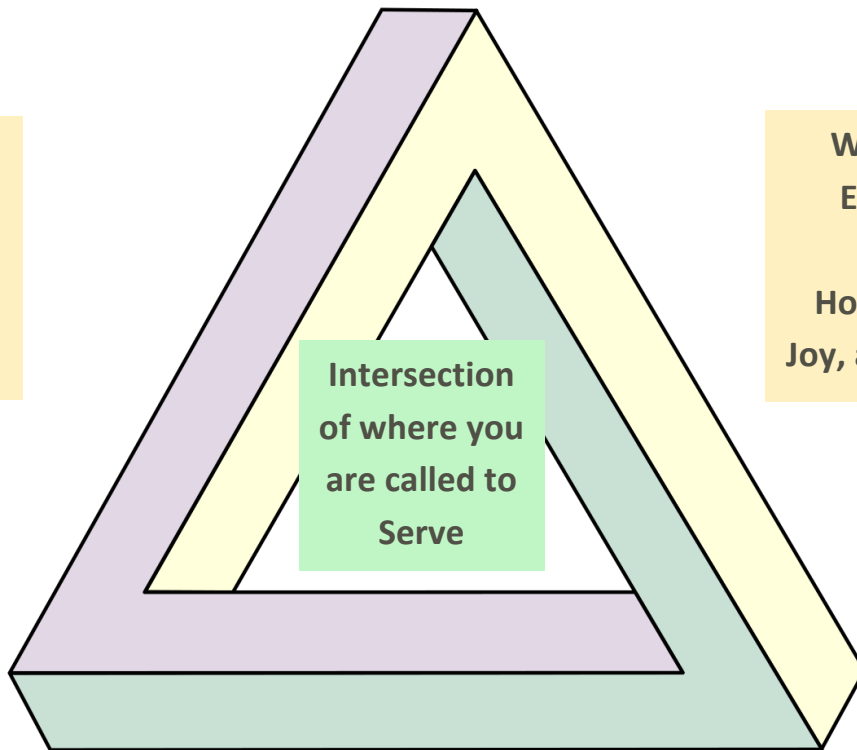

The office is a great place for you to come and feel at home! There are always people there and we love visitors! This will also help you be on top of the scholarship and know about all of the activities happening on campus!

Other scholars can be great friends!

We have 15 scholars... that's 15 people to be friends with on campus! Campus can seem pretty intimidating at first, but you already have a group of people who know you and share values with you. Call one of them up to have lunch!

Meeting Three

Chapter Three: Dispositions

For our third meeting we will have group discussion and activities on our topic: Who we are Called to Be as Community-Engaged Learners. To prepare please read Chapter Three and review the discussion questions below. You do not have to view any of the videos in the chapter. Let Julie know if you have any questions.

Questions to Think About While Reading:

1. What are dispositions? Do you think you have any?
1. What assumptions or biases do you have/ have had about Springfield? Where did you get the information for some of these biases?

To prepare for our meeting please take the 9 Types Enneagram Test Sample and record your results.

There are 38 questions in this sample test. For each of them, select the answer that applies to you. You may skip questions that really do not apply, but do not avoid questions simply because they are difficult to answer. This test typically takes 5-10 minutes to complete.

Here is the link to complete the test:

Dispositions for Engaging in Community Learning and Community Service

After reading the definition, please reflect on how you use this disposition when serving the community in the box below. You may also write any amendments to the definitions from the book.

Open-Mindedness: Being able to think about an experience in a fresh way and to seek out something new. Being open-minded is being willing to listening to narratives of others and to challenge your own beliefs.

Humility: Recognizing our limitations and continuing to learn by listening to others and taking up tasks that might not be exciting to us. Humility means engaging in the lifelong process of learning and growth while valuing others.

Appreciation of Culture/ Cultural Wealth: To practice Cultural Humility and appreciate Community Cultural Wealth by learning about the various ways people perform resistance, and developing an understanding of empathy for others.

Intellectual Curiosity: To analyze and synthesize information and learn new things by asking complex questions and reflecting. Intellectual Curiosity allows us to formulate new understandings about the systems and structures that govern our world.

Empathy: Demonstrate understanding and sensitivity towards other people through conversations and interactions. Empathy is a willingness to see others and see what they are feeling based on their own experience.

Commitment: Being diligent in our work to be present and to engage directly with community organizations and the people involved. Commitment is the time we spend serving others, and the way we show up each time we serve.

MY ICEBERG

Instructions: On the top of the Iceberg, write words or phrases to describe what people see about you when first meeting you.

Under the iceberg, go a little deeper and write words or phrases to describe who you really are. Write what other people may not know until they get to know you better.

This could be hobbies, interests or adjectives to describe your personality.

“Personality is the tip of the iceberg someone shows you. Character is their true foundation”

- Karen Salmansohn, Author

Riso-Hudson Enneagram Type Indicator (RHETI) SAMPLE

You have answered all the questions -- terrific! Your highest score will indicate your basic type, or it will be among the top 2-3 scores. One thing to note: Personality tests are just samples and do not totally define your inherent self-worth as a person. This test is not designed to stereotype or judge ourselves, but can serve as a starting point to talk about who we are and want to be when Engaging with Community Learning. We are all many things, and though we have different dispositions, no “type” is better than another.

Discussion Questions for all types:

As a group we will take some time to look over the results of the Personality Test and talk about how this relates to dispositions in the chapter.

What was your highest scoring Type from the 9types assessment? What other types did you score high on or do you think are you like?

Does this response surprise you or fit with other personality tests, or self-assessments you have taken?

Based on your results there is a way to work best with others and to interact. What does your type need in order to be successful when communicating with others?

Are you a more flexible or accepting person, or do you prefer structure and order to focus and complete tasks? What are some of the strengths of you type, what does your type succeed in?

What are some things you find are hard for you personally, or with your type? What do struggle with in your own disposition?

How do you use your energy in your personal relationships and how can you better engage with others when you build relationships?

How does this relate to Community-Engaged learning? Why is learning about “self” important before going in to learn about others?

Meeting Four

Chapter Four: Responsibilities

For our fourth meeting we will have group discussion and activities on our topic: What we Need to Do as Community-Engaged Learners. To prepare please read Chapter Four and review the discussion questions below. You do not have to view any of the videos in the chapter. Let Sarah or Julie know if you have any questions.

Questions to Think About While Reading:

1. How can you be a contributing member of a community in regards to responsibilities?
2. The chapter lays out four main responsibilities when engaging the community, Making Human Connections, Professional Behavior, Communication and Critical Reflection. Which of these responsibilities, if not all, do you practice when you participate in Community Engaged learning and why is it important to do so?
3. What is one takeaway from the chapter you can share with the group?

Cultural Competency and Cultural Humility Workshop

As a part of our Discussion, we will also be completing a brief workshop on the attitudes, knowledge and skills required while engaging in community to build Cultural Competency and work towards the goal of practicing Cultural Humility.

Before the workshop please complete the self-reflection, assessment attached

Preparing for Community Engagement: understanding cultural competency and humility

What does Culture Competency mean?

Culturally competent citizens understand, communicate with, and effectively interact with people across cultures. Cultural competence encompasses:

- being aware of one's own world view
- developing positive attitudes towards cultural differences
- gaining knowledge of different cultural practices and world views
- developing skills for communication and interaction across cultures

What does Cultural Humility mean?

The concept of cultural humility was developed by Melanie Tervalon and Jann Murray-Garcia in 1998 to address inequities in the healthcare field. It is now used in many fields, including education, public health, social work, and library science, to increase the quality of interactions between diverse community members. Cultural humility goes beyond the concept of cultural competence to include:

- A personal lifelong commitment to self-evaluation and self-critique
- Recognition of power dynamics and imbalances, a desire to fix those power imbalances and to develop partnerships with people and groups who advocate for others
- Institutional accountability (Tervalon & Murray-Garcia, 1998)

Adapted from Project Ready: Reimagining Equity and Access for Diverse Youth

You can be a contributing member of the community if you understand:

- The history
- The assets of the community
- The community life- civic organizations, arts, culture, and recreation
- The physical environment- housing, landscape, transportation, and places of employment
- The struggles of people, and WHY the struggles exist

Principle of Good Practice in Community Engagement

- Awareness of self
- Commitment
- Finding commonalities while also valuing and respecting other cultures
- Acceptable language (refrain from using slang, derogatory or offensive language)
- Apologize if you offend someone and explain how you feel when someone offends you
- Willingness to learn and listen
- Disposition to understand that learning is an ongoing process
- Humility to discover and challenge ways in which you can improve in your learning
- Reflection on what you are learning and observing as you engage in service
"Reflection will help you determine whether the new experiences and information warrant a change in the way you think about the world" (Donahue 70)

Adapted from Weber State University, Preparing to Serve Training

Engaging with Communities

- Learn to listen and build relationships-even with people of different views
- See each other as a people first and foremost with a story and experience as complex as our own
- Address problems that exist and enhance the sense of community by rebuilding connections

Adapted from Revive Civility, The Need to Revive Civility and Respect in our Communities

Attitudes: respect, openness, curiosity and discovery. Openness and curiosity imply a willingness to risk and to move beyond one's comfort zone. In communicating respect to others, it is important to demonstrate that others are valued. These attitudes are foundational to the further development of knowledge and skills needed for the intercultural competence.

Knowledge: cultural self-awareness (meaning the way one's culture has influenced one's identity and worldview), culture-specific knowledge, deep cultural knowledge including understanding other worldviews, and sociolinguistic awareness.

Skills: Observation, listening, evaluating, analyzing, interpreting, and relating.

Adapted from Building Cultural Competence, Intercultural Competence Model

Competency vs. Humility
8
Competency	Humility
• Knowledge and training • The idea that one can become "competent" in other cultures • Based on academic knowledge rather than a lived experience • Promotes skill building and working toward an end goal • Supports the myth that culture does not change or evolve	• Introspective and co-learning • The idea of learning with and from clients • No end goal or end result • Encourages lifelong learning with an appreciation of the journey • Attempts to diminish power dynamics between advocate and survivor

Meeting Five

Chapter Five: Transformations

For our first meeting we will have our Introduction to the Springfield Community and a group discussion on our topic: How community-engaged learning changes us. To prepare please read chapter five. As part of our meeting, we will be doing a group service project!

Questions to Think About While Reading:

1. What does transformative learning mean? What makes transformative learning happen?
2. Who and/or what is transformed by community-engaged learning?
3. If you don't mind sharing, what is a service experience that you have had that has transformed you and why?

Please bring your binder to Meeting Five. We will review the Scholar Paperwork in the binder and talk about how to start your service in the Springfield Community this Spring.
